JACKSONVILLE'S SUNDAY SALOONS.

[Extract from a sermon preached last Sunday morning by Rev. W. T. Veale, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, Jacksonville.]

The saloons of Jacksonville should be closed on Sunday.

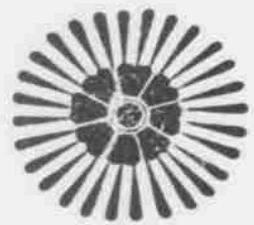

In round numbers there are about forty-five saloons in your city, and only three of these, I am told, are closed all the Sunday.

Why is the ordinance on Sunday closing not enforced? Why are there forty or more saloons allowed to be in full blast as far as drinking is concerned? And why do police officers close their eyes to the grim spectacle of two beer barrels being rolled into a saloon on Bay street on Sunday evening at 5 o'clock, when the supply ran short? Police officers, mark you, are under the orders and spell of their superiors. Had a Roosevelt been in the chief's chair, those two barrels of beer and their owners upon them would have ridden into court on Black Monday, but as it was, they were drained to the dregs, and no doubt the health of the city officials was ignominiously called for between the flying froth.

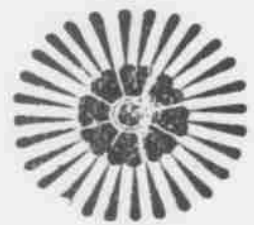

"Will you take something?" said a teetotaler to a friend standing near a tavern. "Well, I don't care if I do." "Come," said the teetotaler, "then, let's take a walk."—Ex.

The Nicholson law in Indiana does not allow saloons to have stained glass window fronts.

Cannon Falls, Minn., does not allow pool and billiard tables in saloons.
